DISCUSSION

The Liberal Party of Canada is the largest party in the Parliament, and has been since 2015. They were led by Prime Minister Justin Trudeau since that election, until his recent resignation. They are a broadly left-wing party, with legislative focuses on climate change, healthcare access, and social equity.

The party traditionally draws support from urban centers and younger voters. Its policies often balance progressive social values with market-friendly economics. With Trudeau's departure, the party is now led by Mark Carney, current and candidate for Prime Minister.

LIBERAL PARTY

CONSERVATIVE PARTY

The Conservative Party of Canada is the second-largest party in Parliament and the main opposition. It has been led by Pierre Poilievre since 2022. The party is center-right, with legislative focuses on economic growth, lower taxes, and public safety. Conservatives tend to draw support from rural areas, western provinces, and older voters.

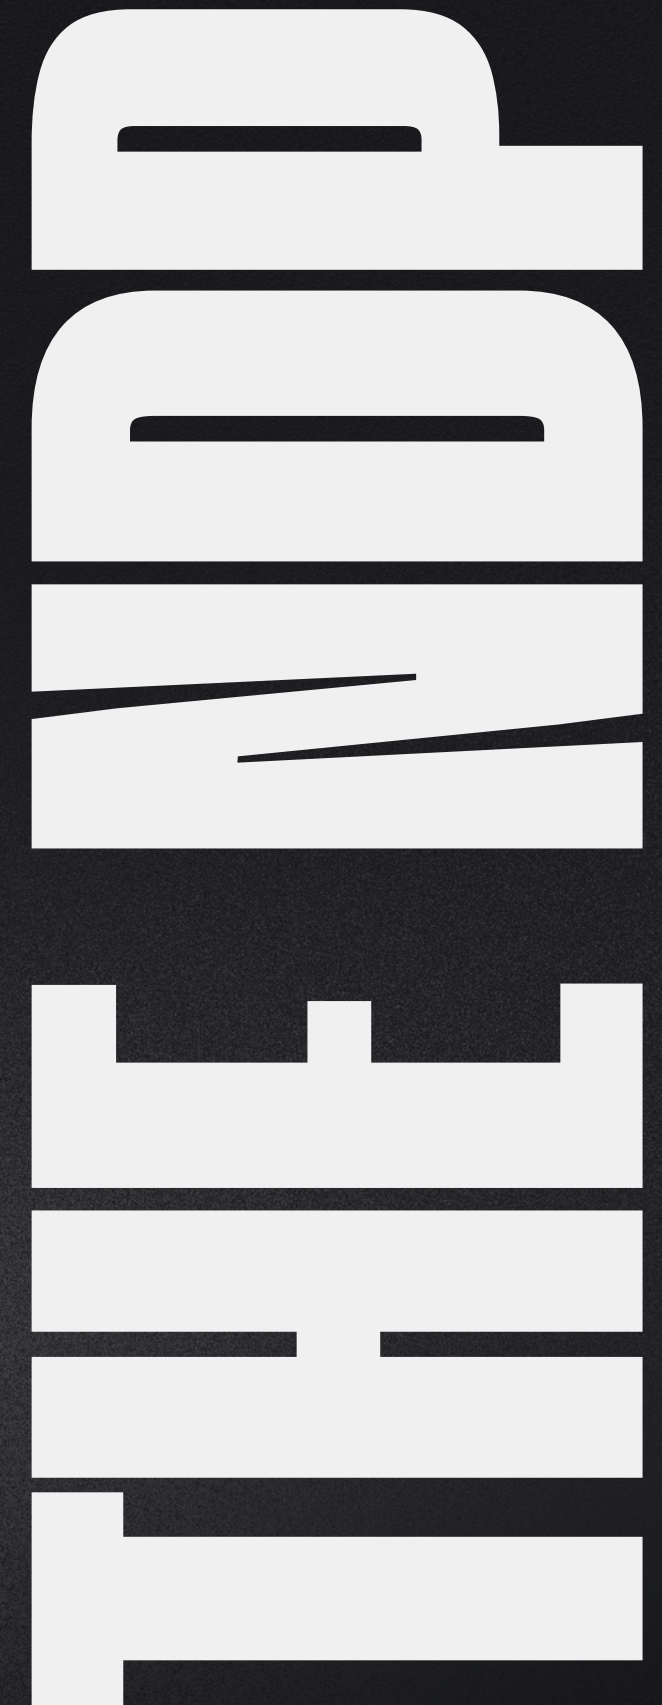

Who are the New Democrats?

The New Democratic Party is Canada's main social-democratic party and currently holds the fourth-most seats in Parliament. It has been led by Jagmeet Singh since 2017. The party is firmly left-wing, with legislative focuses on universal healthcare expansion, workers' rights, and affordable housing. The NDP's support base includes young people, unions, and urban progressives.

Partnership With Trudeau

Jagmeet Singh and the NDP have supported Justin Trudeau's minority Liberal government through a confidence-and-supply agreement since 2022. This partnership allowed key NDP priorities—like dental care and pharmacare—to move forward in exchange for backing the Liberals on confidence votes.
